The work which Gandiji had taken in hand was not only the achievement of political freedom but also establishment of a social order based on truth and non-violence, unity and peace, equality and universal brotherhood and maximum freedom for all. This unfinished part of his experiment was perhaps even more difficult to achieve than the achievements of freedom. In the political struggle the fight was against a foreign power and all could and did either join it or at least wished its success and gave it their moral support. In establishing the social order of this pattern, there was a possibility of a conflict arising between groups and classes of our own people. Experience shows that man values his possessions even more than his life because in the former he sees the means of perpetuation and survival through his descendants after his body is reduced to ashes. The new order cannot be established without radical change in men's mind and attitude towards property and at some stage or other the haves to yield place to the have-nots.

4. Read the following para and answer the questions given below in context thereof: (25 Marks)

The history of civilization shows how man always has to choose between the right and wrong use of discoveries of science. This has never been more true than in our own age. In a brief period, amazing discoveries have been made and applied to practical purposes. It would be ungrateful not to recognize how immense have been the boons of science. It has brought, within the reach of multitudes, benefits and advantages which only a short time ago were the privileges of the few. It has shown how hunger, mal-nutrition and disease can be overcome. It has not only lengthened life but it has bettered its quality. Fields of knowledge, experience, recreation open in the past only to a few have now been thrown open to the millions. Through the work of science, the ordinary man today has been given the opportunity of a longer and fuller life. We must acknowledge all that science has done and is doing for the welfare of our race.

But the gift of modern science can be misused. The motor driven vehicle facilitates business and gives harmless enjoyment to many, but they can strew the roads with dead and dying. The cinema is a means of instruction and recreation opening “magic casements”, but it is often a channel of vulgarity and false values. The wireless can link the world together in a moment, but it can also be the instrument of lying propaganda. The aeroplane makes travel rapid and easy, but it can also become a weapon of destruction. It is this twofold aspect of the use to which science can be put that has raised in an acute form the question as to how far it is morally justifiable to make and perfect scientific discoveries and inventions.
